Types of Membership

The by-laws of the Clan Maxwell Society provide for three types of membership based on relationship to the Maxwell family. Eligibility for the three categories is as follows:

- Full Membership is for a person 18 years of age or older who (1) bears the surname Maxwell or the surname of an Allied Family (however spelled) by birth and descent, or (2) whose mother, grandparent, great grandparent, or great great grandparent bears or bore the surname Maxwell or the surname of an Allied Family by birth and descent.
- Associate Membership is for a person who is the wife, husband, or legally adopted child of one who would qualify for full membership.
- Affiliate Membership is for a person 18 years of age or older whose descent from persons bearing the surname Maxwell or the surname of an Allied Family is more distant than five generations.

Allied Families

Because of their close relationship as allies, septs or dependents of the Maxwell family in Scottish history, the following families are included in Clan Maxwell Society:

Adair	Kirkland	Paulk
Blackstock	Latimore	Peacock
Dinwiddie	MacKittrick	Polk

The Border Reivers

The period from the War of Scottish Independence, about 1315, until the union of crowns, in 1603, was one of conflict along the border between England and Scotland. Both sides resorted to the use of wardens — royally appointed overseers — to keep things under control. It was seldom a very firm grip on either side of the border.

The term "reiver" probably applies best to the latter part of that period, the mid to late 16th century. This corresponds to a period which included the rules of Henry VIII, Elizabeth I, and Mary Queen of Scots. It was the term applied to mounted raiders who stole livestock and goods and engaged in a highly organized "protection racket." The term "blackmail" in the English language dates from this period.

The term reivers was applied collectively to a number of families who were classed as "riding families:" i.e., they habitually raided on horseback. To "reive" was "to lift" or in the more modern term "to steal." In the American west, the term "rustle" was used in a similar way. An excellent look at the border culture of the period can be found in the book, The Steel Bonnets, by George MacDonald Fraser. The most notorious of the riding families lived in the Middle March of Scotland, east of the area administered by the Maxwells. As a warden, the Maxwell chief would be charged with keeping the peace and redressing any wrongs charged to people under his jurisdiction. There is no record of Lord Maxwell going reiving, but one can certainly wonder if some of his tenants went along for the rides (and the booty).

Nicknames or bynames may give us an inkling of what colorful characters they were. How would you like to meet a man called "Archie Fire-the-Braes" or "Out-with-the-Sword" or "Cleave-the-Crunne (Crown)" on the other end of a 13 foot steel tipped lance? These border riders were a colorful lot. Steel helmets or bonnets, body armor, and propensity for risk-taking made them a fierce and contentious lot.
